FOUNDATION FOR A DRUG-FREE WORLD

The United Nations has declared May 16, 2025, as the "International Day of Living in Peace" and the Conference is the climax of the day. Representatives from all around the world gathered to discuss the issues that are impacting world peace and wellness.

This Global Forum was attended by high-ranking government officials, youth coalitions, healthcare professionals, scientists, sports figures, diplomats, non-governmental organizations, media representatives, and national artists. The distinguished conference speakers have been carefully selected to present the findings of large-scale national and international programs, evidence-based data, and conclusions.

UNITED NATIONS

The themes covered at the conference were Religious Tolerance, Human Rights, Education, Health and Wellness, Social Discord and Sustainable Communities Worldwide. At the core of the conference was the participation of international leaders from diverse backgrounds who convened to develop workable solutions for these global crises. They are all involved in local, regional and international efforts that have the common goal of helping communities to become Self-Sufficient, to advance in Education and Technology to better integrate into the world community. The evolving presence and importance of Quantum Science and Artificial Intelligence was omnipresent in the discussions, resulting in the consensus that we have, "To promote and deliver useful, valid technology to people" and communities thereby improving social well-being, productivity, security and prosperity".

Dr. Bernard Fialkoff, the President and Founder of the Foundation for a Drug Free World the Americas Chapter, and Special UN Envoy for COJEP International / Goodwill Ambassador Hugues Sanon D.P.R.S. / D.F.M.M., and Maria Lozada Fialkoff, Co-founder of Time for Truth Foundation were the co-hosts of the conference. In addition, Dr. Hong, Tao-Tze, President of the Federation of World Peace and Love (FOWPAL) and Zhang-men-ren of Tai Ji Men and Ali Gedikoglu, President of COJEP International were the Keynote Speakers.

The daylong conference provided a forum for the 150-world leaders attending to articulate their perspective of the issues their local communities are battling daily. They were able to provide insight into the real and perceived causes of the difficulties faced by their communities. In today's modern world, technological advancements and artificial intelligence have shifted focus away from family, community, integrity and humanity, was a common issue sighted by many conference participants. The main tenant that was developed was "The necessity of recognizing basic wellness, education, universal human rights, science and religious freedom, is grounded in the notion that trust, justice and freedom of personal spiritual pursuit exert a civilizing influence on moral conduct; And that mankind survives best when collaborating on common, interconnected global values."

Maxitia Project Inc. (MPI) and The Fundación de Prevención de Adicciones y Violencia Doméstica NY Carlos Martinez Inc. share these principles. The programs that both organizations provide, while specific to community problems and needs, have at their essence the creation of individuals and communities that are resilient and self-sustainable, thus able to contribute to their own progress and societal advancement and stability.

To better understand the premises that give these efforts their bases, it is vital to know the backdrop. I will provide an overview: Human dignity and respect are crucial for achieving sustainable international peace and ensuring the survival of communities, nations, and mankind. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), adopted in 1948, is a landmark document that outlines fundamental human rights for all, regardless of nationality, ethnicity, religion, or any other status. It is a cornerstone of international human rights law, setting a common standard for achievement for all nations. The UDHR covers a wide range of rights, including civil, political, economic, social, and cultural rights.

The deterioration of some societal norms and decreased access to quality healthcare has led to a deterioration of familial structure, runaway mental and emotional illness, a devastating global drug epidemic, exacerbated gender-based violence and religious discrimination; All destroying community security. The global drug abuse crisis affected 275 million people in 2021, with 39.5 million suffering from drug use disorders, as reported by the 2021 World Drug Report.

The US Surgeon General published extremely important scientific findings to collaborate that loneliness is far more than just a bad feeling harming both individual and societal health. Dr. Murthy MD stated that social isolation is associated with a greater risk of cardiovascular disease, dementia, stroke, depression, anxiety, and premature death. He continues that the mortality impact of being socially disconnected is like that caused by smoking up to 15 cigarettes / day, and even greater than that associated with obesity and physical inactivity. Epidemiological studies demonstrated that the harmful consequences of lack of social connection are felt in schools, workplaces, and civic organizations, diminishing performance, productivity, and engagement.

Gender-based violence statistics show that many young women who are trafficked hail from impoverished backgrounds, often experiencing domestic violence, alcoholism, and substance abuse within their families, as well as the absence of family members due to drug-related issues. Between 2005 and 2010, in Europe and the Americas, women's lifetime use of tranquilizers and sedatives significantly exceeded that of men. Even when women do not directly participate in drug use or the drug trade, they often bear the responsibility of mitigating associated risks for themselves and their families; and are forced to carry the double and triple burden of care when families disintegrate, and community life deteriorates. This resultant lack of adequate nurturing, childcare, and love condemns youth worldwide to loneliness and isolation. Another fundamental crisis is the world of communication, marked by bullying, conflict, and lack of collaboration.

World Conflict is a primary reason for keeping kids out of the classroom, with USAID estimating that half of all children not attending school are living in conflict zones — totaling 125 million. To put this into perspective, in 2013, UNESCO reported that conflict was keeping 50 million students out of the classroom. In response to the crisis, many parents have chosen to keep their children at home. Regrettably, as conflicts become more prolonged, they threaten to create multiple lost generations.

Furthermore, language and literacy barriers exist, such that even if a child attends school in their birthplace, they may face a language barrier between their mother tongue and the official language. UNESCO estimates that 40% of school-aged children do not have access to education in a language they understand. This is especially difficult for students who have migrated to a new country, sometimes having to learn an entirely new alphabet of misunderstood symbols. Literacy and misunderstood words pose a significant challenge in education for students struggling with their mother tongue. This ripple effect hinders ability to learn other subjects and increases drop out. The subsequent lack of confidence and failure results in physical outbursts, mental depression, and social withdrawal; Compounding human rights issues, drug abuse, violence, and economic well-being.

As we confront conflict and war consequences, we realize that amongst U.S. veterans who incurred a physical or mental injury while serving in or after September 11, 2001, 83 % had insomnia, 80 % suffered anxiety, and 77 % had depression. Veteran challenges include mental health issues, substance use disorders, homelessness and suicide; with veterans experiencing higher rates than the general population.

The 68th session of the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women (CSW68) underscored the significance of ensuring women's fundamental human rights, including access to higher education, safety, and freedom from gender-based violence, as well as equal access to economic opportunities and sustainable infrastructure. Our collective responsibility to mothers and future generations is enshrined in Articles 3 and 33 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on November 20, 1989. These provisions stress that the best interests of the child must be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children and that children must be protected from the illicit use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

In summary, participating organizations and individuals are committed to:

1. Reaffirming our dedication as global citizens to protect the fundamental human right of self-determined spiritual and religious practice, recognizing its empowerment of individuals through respect, tolerance, and a subsequent decrease in violence, war, drug abuse, and economic turmoil.
2. Noting the significance of educational systems that address individual confusion, utilizing the student's native language and sequential gradients, in cultivating genuine understanding and resultant competence, rational behavior, and empowerment.
3. Emphasizing the crucial role of stable family structure and women in creating community prosperity and positive, mitigating impacts on human rights abuse, religious decay, societal prejudice, and global health crises. The vital need to truly welcome home our War Heroes.

4. Highlighting the importance of the International Year of Quantum Science and Technology (IYQ) and quantum science advancements; and emerging discoveries in formulating new technologies that enable global communication and coordination.

5. Collaborating as unified entities in conjunction with the UN Sustainable Goals to establish partnerships and progress among groups and nations, foster family and women's rights, protect human rights, ensure individual religious, spiritual freedoms, support quantum science research to clarify universal laws, enhance educational standards, and promote global physical and mental well-being; And providing structured / well-planned re-entry for veterans of the armed forces.

The goal is to facilitate collaboration among like-minded humanitarian, scientific, governmental, and social groups, thereby ensuring the fundamental human right to freedom of spiritual and religious belief; education systems that clarify individual confusion delivered in a logical sequence; the proper recognition of the need and implementation of re-entry programs for our Veteran War Heroes; the integration of quantum science advancements that empower global communication; the presence of mothers and stable families that mitigate human rights abuses / religious decline and the escalating global drug / terrorism / war crises; the protection of justice, equality, and community well-being. The conference aims to align with, empower and advance the United Nations' humanitarian purpose.

Maxitia Project Inc. and The Fundación de Prevención de Adiciones y Violencia Doméstica NY Carlos Martinez Inc. are honored to have been invited to participate in this vital world conference and proud to be working partners with the host organizations and participants.
